My guess is that most junior scholars at R1 institutions already know what kind of book they need to publish in order to get tenure, and I sense from several of the comments a different but related question going on in this thread: if I am an advanced grad student, a serial postdoc, an adjunct of a few years standing, etc., will pursuing book publication with a top press get me a tenure-track job? The answer is also “don’t count on it” — not only because, as innumerable articles attest, no matter how starry your CV it is very very likely that you will not get a tenure-track job in today’s academic climate, but also because it might even damage your chances.
